CLEANING TIP OF THE MONTH

Safely Using Cleaning Chemicals

Follow common sense when using cleaning chemicals; read all instructions, wear protective equipment if the product instructs you to do so, and keep pets and children away from cleaning solutions. Always know the phone numbers to call for help if you acquire a chemical burn or are overcome by toxic fumes.

- Always use chemicals in the proper amounts. If the instructions say to mix one gallon of water with six ounces of the product, precisely measure six ounces, and don't guess.
- Never combine different chemicals.
- Do not substitute chemicals.
- Never use a chemical if it is in an unlabeled container. Also, never place chemicals into another container without first labeling the product. Preferably, transfer the instructions for use as well as the ingredient label from the old container onto the new container.
- Always read the entire instructions before using a cleaning chemical.
- If the product states that you must wear protective equipment, then wear goggles and rubber gloves.
- If there is a toll-free phone number to call in case of accidental ingestion or other emergency situation after using the product, know where to find that number on the product.
- Post the phone number to the National Capital Poison Center in a prominent place in your home, near a phone. That number is 800-222-1222. Or, you can call 911.

MGCS News:

Good for Business

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) estimates that people spend up to 90% of their time indoors. Products and materials indoors release volatile chemicals and particles into the air that may negatively affect a person's health or result in unacceptable odors. Furthermore, undesirable IAQ can increase the risk of sickness and lead to ailments such as allergies, asthma, reproductive and developmental problems, and cancer. The economic impact is equally alarming, since poor IAQ can affect employee health and productivity. A 2005 report by California's Air Resource's Board estimates the cost of poor IAQ in California alone to be $45 billion per year. A green cleaning program can help reduce these costs.

Millennium News

Millennium would like to give special recognition and thank the top crew for the second quarter of 2010 for consistent outstanding performance. Crew supervisor Juan Gonzalez, along with Martha Cardona, Rosalino Ruiz, Guillermina Gordillo, Nivia Lopez, Jose Navarro and Day Porter Jaime Martinez are responsible for the maintenance of the following facilities; Princess Cruises / VDA Properties in Valencia, CA. All of these facilities received on average the highest cleanliness inspection results. Thank you for your hard work and dedication. You all are true examples and great representations of Millennium Maintenance Systems.
